A Hiding Place

An army marched over the land for many miles. Then they came to the Floating City. They wanted to attack. They could not. They were stopped by water. They had no boats.

The Floating City

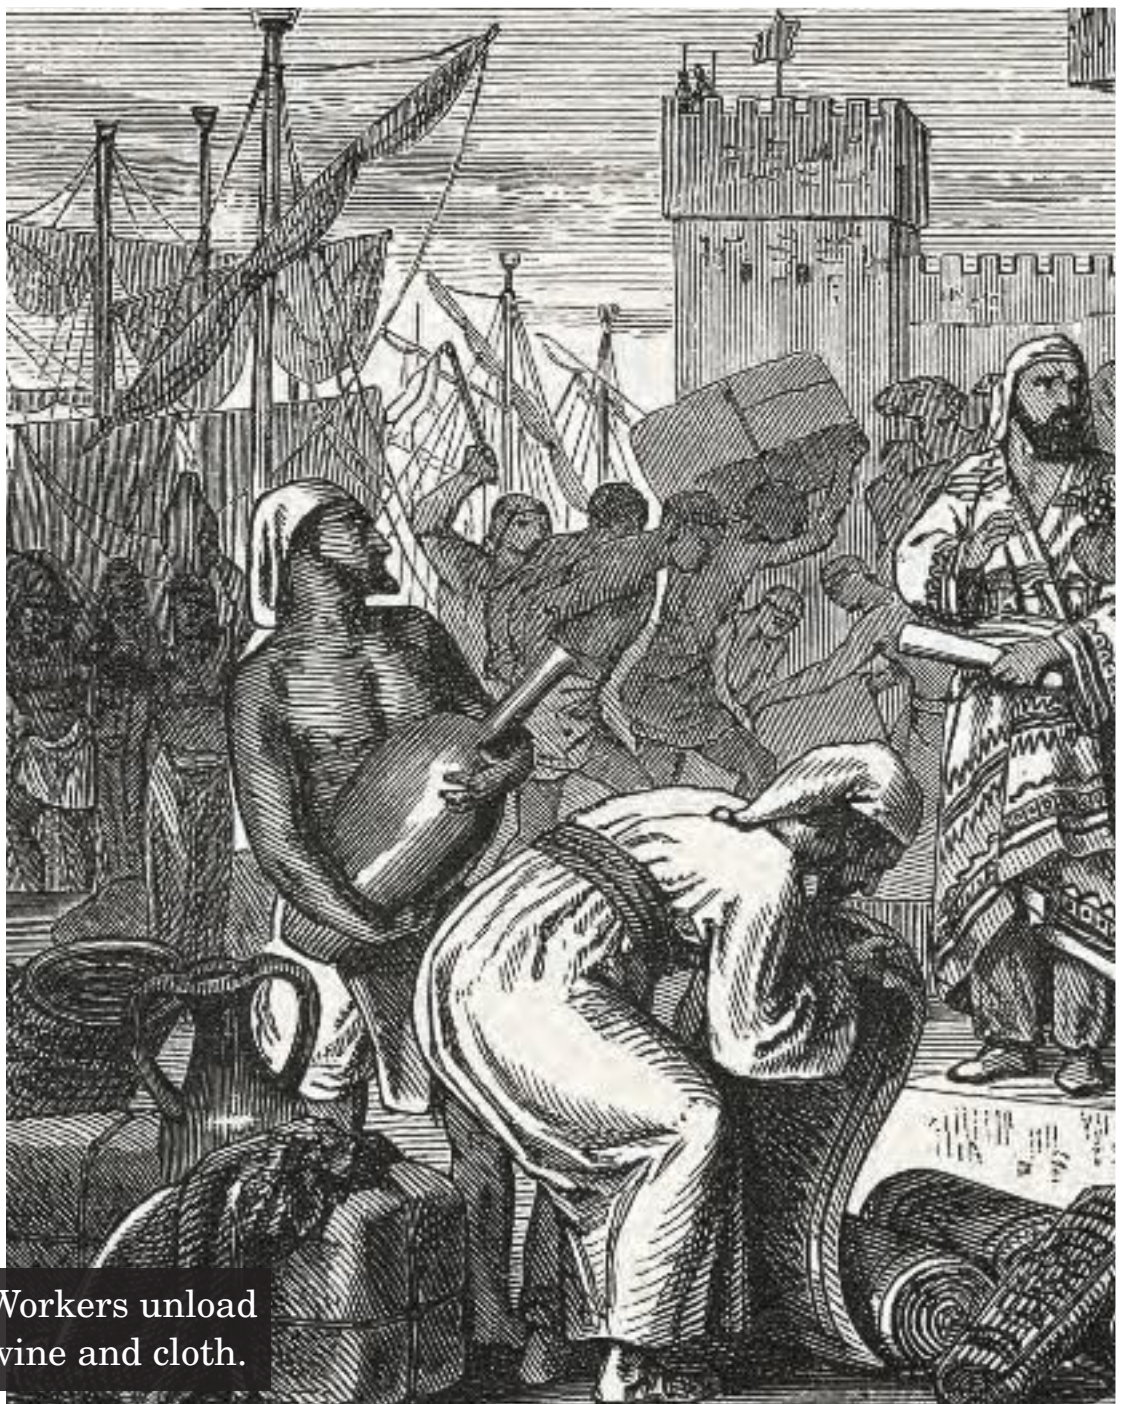

The Floating City's real name was Venice (VEN-iss). The city of Venice was not just one place. It was a group of islands. The islands were close to each other. A boat could sail from one island to the others.

The islands were small. The land was flat and muddy. The ground was soft. People could build small houses with straw roofs. Big houses would sink quickly in the mud.

Venice was in a good spot. It was by the sea. Ships could stop there. In Venice, people traded cloth and grain that came from the ships.

More and more people wanted to live in Venice. The people of Venice wanted the city to grow. They would need tall buildings to hold more people. But tall, heavy buildings would sink. They had to come up with a plan.
