

Lions' manes make them get hot. This tires them easily.

Some lion dads kick their sons out of the pride. Male cubs grow older. They become a threat. Lion dads fight them. They want control.

Lion dads fight hard. But they mostly sleep. They sleep 20 hours a day. They save energy to fight.

Lion moms do most of the work. They take care of cubs. They hunt. Lion dads babysit. They play rough. They have powerful jaws. But they're gentle when playing with cubs.

Cubs play with their dads' tails. They play with their manes. Manes are extra neck hair. Some lion dads like playing. Some snarl. Some bat the cubs away.

HUMANS DO WHAT?!?

Philippe Morgese is a single dad. He has a daughter named Emma. He puts barrettes in her hair. He does pigtails. Then, he does braids. He practices a lot. He teaches classes. He teaches hairstyling. He teaches brushing. He teaches how to make ponytails. He teaches how to make buns. He teaches braiding. He said, "It's not even about the hair. It's about the bond. It's about coming together and sharpening our skills. I'm excited to inspire." He started a Web page. It's called "Daddy Daughter Hair Factory." Dads post pictures. Morgese won a contest. Greg Wickherst started the contest. Wickherst is also a single dad. He went to beauty school. He learned to fix hair. He created a Web site. It's called "Dads Guide to Surviving Hair." He posts lessons, contests, and stories. Dads do anything for their daughters.
